GOING BEYOND SKIN-DEEP

Dermatologist Lynn McKinley-Grant's journey has taken her from Harvard Medical School to treating leprosy at Albert Schweitzer Hospital in Gabon to the busy wards of Washington Hospital Center and a medical practice in Chevy Chase. ¶ At each stop, she's been astonished by the significance of skin. "It really does reflect everything that's going on inside the body, from diabetes to broken bones and cardiac disease," she says. ¶ The doctor spends as much time talking with patients about their history, diet, and daily stresses as she does treating ailments. "To me a rash isn't just a rash," she says. "I'm going to look at the whole person to make a diagnosis." ¶ Her focus on personalized care can make for long waits for patients and short lunches for McKinley-Grant. She doesn't accept most private insurance; this, she says, weeds out patients with minor ailments and ensures that she sees those in most need of help. "I didn't go to medical school for the money," she says. ¶ In what free time she has, she removes gang tattoos gratis to help local Latino youths escape violent lifestyles.
